Draft No. 1 of December 8, 1941, War Message to Congress. Several hours after learning of Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt dictated a short address to be delivered to a Joint Session of Congress the following day. FDR's handwritten revisions - visible in this December 7 draft of the speech - made the 'Day of Infamy' speech one of the most memorable in American history.

DRAFT No. 1 December 7, 1941. PROPOSED MESSAGE TO THE CONGRESS Yesterday, December 7, 1941, a date which will live in wo the United States of America was simultaneously and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan The United States was at the moment at peace with that nation and was the conversation with its Government and its Emperor looking toward the maintenance of peace in the Pacific. Indeed, one hour after Japanese air squadrons had commenced bombing in the Japanese Ambassador to the United States and his colleague delivere to the Secretary of State a formal reply to a end, but contained no threat armed attack. It will be recorded that the distance Hawaii from Japan make it obvious that the attack planned many days ago. During the intervening time the Japanese Government has deliberately sought to deceive the United States by false statements and expressions of hope for continued peace.

The attack yesterday on Name and on the Toland of Cabo have has caused severe damage to American naval and military forces. Very many American lives have been lost. In addition American ships have been torpedoed on the high seas between San Francisco and Honolulu.

Yesterday the Japanese Government also launched an attack against Malaya.

H Jan't might Informine functs attacked Special Source of Japan has, therefore, undertaken a surprise offensive extending formed throughout the Pacific area. The facts of yesterday speak for themselves. The people of the United States have already formed their opinions and well understand the implications throughout the safety of our nation.

As Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy I have, of the directed that all measures be taken for our defense.

Long will we remember the character of the onslaught against

A No mather how bong it may take his to secreams this permittated inclusion the american prople will in their rightions might win through to resolute wintery

I speak the will of the Congress and of the people of this, resuntry when I assert that we will not only defend ourselves to the uttermost but will see to it that this form of treachery shall never endanger us again. Hostilities exist. There is no mincing

the fact that our people, our territory and our interests are in grave danger.

I, therefore, ask that the Congress declare that since the unprovoked and dastardly attack by Japan on Sunday, December seventh, a state of war exists between the United Statew and the Japanese Empire.
